

Do you want to learn how to lead more effectively in an increasingly complex environment?

LEAD21 will help you accomplish this with a highly skilled group of facilitators, which has 98 years of combined experience with leadership development programs for land grant universities.

The LEAD21 program is for faculty, specialists, program leaders, district and regional directors, research directors, department chairs, and others looking to improve their leadership efficacy in land grant universities and other strategic partners that link research, academics and extension.

Program Offerings

The 12-month program features three sessions, self-directed learning and peer coaching. A number of core competencies are identified, studied, reinforced and actively applied throughout the program.

These competencies will improve your ability to:

Communicate effectively: Become better at listening carefully, using questions skillfully, and communicating clear, direct and honest messages.

Manage conflict: Learn to recognize the root causes of conflict along with a range of strategies to mediate and resolve issues.

Foster collaboration: Understand how to facilitate programs that collaborate across structural, organizational and international boundaries.

Lead change: Be able to recognize the need for innovation, appropriately implement a change process and measure the progress.

Secondary competencies include:

- Leading with integrity and values.
- Developing self and others.
- Valuing diversity.
- Developing a deeper knowledge and appreciation of higher education.

Applications are due November 15.

Tuition is $9,500, which includes all participant materials, lodging and meals. A limited number of scholarships are available.
